Hi all, in advance of the discussions around this I wanted to post one of the videos I found on Dan Pena. the video is just over 30 min long but particular attention to part 2 at 24.12 minutes in. There are lots of other (formal Dan Pena ones) that also show him speaking to large groups.

When I spoke to the society they said this: I can certainly ask their team for a list of topics. From his previous talks, it is likely to be on work ethic, passion, confidence etc. We will discuss with Mr Pena beforehand to ensure the basic principles aren't breached. He is experienced with talking for university institution's, he will be able to monitor his speech compliant with his principles of authenticity. The same principles also apply to his profanity. He will be able to tone these gestures and words down for the event. We will provide examples to attendees of previous similar talks and make them aware of his nature. From there, we will offer welfare support after the talk for anyone who feels distressed. We will explain how his nature has the goal of motivating.

Booking for the great hall would go through event exeter so I'm not sure whether the venue has been secured yet - we could always suggest a different venue if we want that as a mitigation to reduce capacity?

Hello all - I have also found the below, within an article titled "Here's why you shouldn't be a jerk at work" by Men's Variety magazine. This is a compilation from interviews and talks so does bring together the "worst" examples into one video:

Research Shows Being a Jerk at Work Doesn't Pay Off

New research reveals why being a jerk at work is a bad idea. It may seem intrinsic that being a workplace jerk is not cool. A new study tells us why. Are you a jerk?

Thanks xxxxx Did you see the video of him at Greenwich University? Equally as abhorrent.
